The subject of erecting a suitable monument to the memory of a number of confederate soldiers who were in 1834 killed near Sligo on the 7th street pike was taken up and was warmly advocated by Comrade Thompson in a brief but effective speech. In eloquent and burning words he adverted to the fact that we were now a united and happy people and that everywhere all over the Union, both north and south, had been erected memorial tablets to mark the resting places of the blue and the gray who had died in the mighty struggle for what each considered right, and that it was but just and proper that the resting it was but just and proper that the resting has but just and proper that the resting place of the unknown confederates who had yielded up their lives in the southern cause almost under the shadow of the Capitol, where now floats the emblem of a reunited country, should be graced by a monument that would tell their deeds of valor to generations yet unborn. An Exciting Experience in Securing From the San Francisco Chronicle.

The business of replenishing menageries with wild animals is interesting, especially when the circus agents go directly to the haunts of the beasts to capture them alive. J. B. Gaylord, formerly agent for the Ringling Brothers' circus, has had some thrilling experiences in this work. Some time ago he wrote the Ringlings from Singapore about a hunt to capture tigers alive. Among other things he wrote:
"Although the Island of Singapore is only fourteen miles in extent there are no less than 500 tigers that inhabit its woods, and than 500 tigers that inhabit its woods, and people here do not venture alone beyond the city limits after nightfall. The first night of my arrival here, while our ship lay in the harbor, I could plainly hear the roaring of the bloodthirsty beasts as they prowled around the outskirts of the city in search of prey. Mr. De Silva, the native agent, having located several tigers' trains, we started on foot with about fitty natives the following morning. The trip to the first tiger trail was only three or four miles, and we arrived at this point at about 8 o'clock. "After locating the trail exactly and finding the stream to which the tiger must break for water each night on awakening from his all-day sleep (the habit of the tiger) we set about making our preparations. In the direct path of the tiger we dug a pit seven feet wide, ten feet long and fifteen feet deep, but much longer and wider at the bottom than at the top. All the dirt dug from the pit was carefully removed to a considerable distance by the natives, and they showed great care and skill in not leaving any external evidence of the fact that a big hole had been dug. A lot of bamboo strips were next laid over the pit, and they severed with dry leaves.

Refreshments, together with a large number of dolls, were sold, and a neat sum realized.

Igniting a number of torches both to light the way and to forestall any attack that might possibly be made upon us from wild animals, we proceeded in a body to the pit. The roars of the tiger were awful, as he furiously tried to leap upward to gain his freedom. As 1 have already explained to you, the sides of the pit slanted inward toward the top, and at every effort the tiger could be heard striking his nose against the loose earth.

Such a roof garden is in the big downtown bulldings. at every effort the tiger could be heard striking his nose against the loose earth.

"This frantle behavior was kept up for about an hour, when, entirely exhausted, the fierce king of the jungle lay perfectly quiet at the bottom of the pit. Two of the natives now lowered a bamboo basket into the pit, letting the open side fall directly over the supine form of the tiger. Immediately after this a number of natives jumped into the pit and began crowding rattan withes through the sand beneath the tiger and bringing them around the basket. In this manner the tiger was in a few minutes inclosed in the bamboo basket. "Returning to the hut, we awaited the dawn, and as soon as it appeared the natives went back to the pit and lifted the lasket containing the tiger out of it. We detailed ten of the coolies to take our captive to the city. Before they started I took a look at our prize through the rattan withes. He was a magnificent specimen, but the sorriest-looking specimen I ever saw. He was covered with blood from his frantic efforts to get out of the pit, and the skin was peeled from his nose and face, while the eyes were almost entirely closed by the swollen face."

A Remarkable Surgical Operation Performed on a St. Louis Girl. From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A remarkable combined surgical and den tal operation has straightened the crooked face of a St. Louis girl recently brought to Rocsevelt Hospital. Yesterday morning when the doctors discharged the patient, they pronounced her case an unusually interesting one fully demorstrating surgery's powers in remodeling facial deformity.

The brave girl who underwent the torturing operation is Miss Marie Bolenhaus, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Bolenhaus. Before being operated on by the surgeons, her mouth turned up two inches on the right side of her face, and the days resched in operation. inches on the right side of her face, and her jaws worked in opposition. As a child the deformity had not troubled Marie, but as she advanced into womanhoood and found herself unsought in the social circle of her schoolmates, she became thoughtful and melancially. Miss Bolenhaus is an only child of well-to-do parents. The occasional tears which drepped from beneath her gracefully arched cyclashes moved her father to the determination that if it was within the bounds of surgical transformation his daughter should be made happy. been discovered by the summer girl from tion his daughter should be made happy. "Miss Marie was presented to me to see if by a combined surgical and dental operation a strikingly marked deformity of her face could be adjusted. Upon inquiry I found that when the young lady was about four and a half years cld she lost almost the entire lower jaw on the right side by necrosis, due to some unknown cause, probably an accidental blow or fall, which fractured the bone. The fractured part must have come away almost entirely from the sloughing of the tissues in the neek under the jaw, and very little through surgical interference at the time. The perlusteum was thus left intact. Upon careful examination, I discovered that it had filled up with a new growth of bone, which, however, did not grow larger than a three and a half year old child's should be, but the development of the jaw on the other side of her face, being normal, had pushed her chin around so much that it set directly under her right eye instead of being at the lower center of her face.

"I decided that if the new growth of bone were sawed through, it would be possible to force the chin around to the front of the face and hold it there permanently. I advised the operation without the slightest besitation. The surgical part of it consistent in the nack under the defective jaw and sawsaid:

From Harper's Bazar. Mr. Edouard Remenyl, the noted Hungarian violinist, although over sixty years of age, has abated none of his youthful enthusiasm and industry. He determined enthusiasm and industry. He determined over a year ago to devote at least four hours daily, and from that up to fourteen hours, for 800 consecutive days, to special assiduous practice and technical work on the violin. August 1 was his 458th day, and he had up to that time not let a day pass without doing at least the amount of work he had set for shimself. A flattering recention was eiten him last morth at the work he had set for himself. A flattering reception was given him last month at the Mohona Lake Assembly (Madison, Wisconsin), where he played to an enthusiastic audience of over five thousand people, and was compelled to return again and again before the immense crowd would release him. He is an ardent Hungarian patriot, and loves to tell of his tigh Krasuth, low withal claims to be an American of Americans, and no son of the soil is more eloquent than he upon the glory of the country which he has adopted.
